SJC Graduates Record 133 Seniors June 7

The largest graduating class in the history of St. Joseph's College joined the alumni ranks Sunday, June 7, when 133 seniors received bachelor's degrees. The previous record was 127 two years ago.

The day opened with the traditional academic procession from the Administration building to the Chapel for the Baccalaureate Mass at 10:30 a.m. The Mass was celebrated by the Very Rev. John E. Byrne, provincial of the Society of the Most Precious Blood.

After dinner in the college cafeteria, the day's second academic procession marched from Raleigh hall to the fieldhouse for the school's 64th annual commencement exercises at 2 p.m. Presiding over the ceremonies was the Most Rev. John J. Carberry, Bishop of the Diocese of Lafayette-in-Indiana. After the introduction by the Very Rev. Raphael H. Gross, college president, the degree candidates were presented by Fr. Edward A. Maziarz, academic dean.

Ellgass Valedictorian

The valedictory address was delivered by Valedictorian LeRoy M. Ellgass of Chicago. An accounting major with a minor in economics, Ellgass is a member of Delta Epsilon Sigma, the St. Joseph chapter of the National Catholic Honor Society, and was this year's winner of the Indiana Association of Certified Public Accountants' award, given each year to the outstanding accounting senior at St. Joseph's. Ellgass, who graduated cum laude, has received a scholarship to the University of Michigan where he will study for the Master of Business Administration degree in accounting.

Honorary Doctor of Laws degrees were presented to two members of the college Board of Lay Trustees—Frank M. McHale, Indianapolis attorney, and James B. McCahey, Chicago business executive. After Mr. McHale delivered the baccalaureate address (see article on this page), a faculty reception was held for the graduates, parents and friends in Raleigh hall.

McHale, McCahey Receive Honorary LL.D. Degrees

Frank M. McHale, prominent Indianapolis corporation lawyer, offered 133 graduates of St. Joseph's College an outline for success in life at the college's 64th annual commencement exercises Sunday, June 7.

Mr. McHale, the baccalaureate speaker, was awarded the honorary Doctor of Laws degree, along with James B. McCahey, prominent Chicago businessman. Both men are members of the St. Joseph College Board of Lay Trustees. The ceremonies were held in the college fieldhouse.

"Success is not measured in dollars and cents," Mr. McHale told the graduates. "It is happiness and contentment in the position in which you find yourself that means the most. In whatever field of endeavor you may engage, if you are unhappy doing the task before you, then you are in the wrong field or in the wrong organization."

'Give of Yourself'

"Your niche in life may not be chiseled in gold, or studded with diamonds, or encased in platinum; but if you will forego many of the easier and ne'er things of life, endure sacrifice and hardship in order to give just a little bit more of yourself, and carry the cross of hardship nobly, courageously and faithfully, your niche in life will be engraved in the hearts of those who know you, and that is the real measure of success."

"There will be setbacks, hardships, struggles, disappointments, and perhaps even failure," said Mr. McHale, "but remember that the world loves a fighter, loves a man of courage and despises a quitter. It was not meant by God that you should not taste of the bitter. That is why He has endowed you with many graces to overcome such things."

A native of Logansport, Ind., Mr. McHale is the senior member of the Indianapolis law firm of McHale, Cook, Welch and McKinney, and is recognized as one of the outstanding corporation and trial attorneys in Indiana. His clients include the Nickel Plate Railroad, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Co., Northern Indiana Public Service Co., Commonwealth Edison Co. of Indiana, Inc., Union Carbide Corp., United States Freight Co., and the General Tire and Rubber Co., among others. He's also the legal representative of the Rt. Rev. Paul C. Schulte, Archbishop of Indianapolis.

Active in Politics

In addition, Mr. McHale is a director and member of the executive committee of the Nickel Plate Railroad, a director and vice-president of the United States Freight Co., chairman of the Board of Directors of Southern Indiana Railway, Inc., chairman of the Board of Directors of the National Bank of Logansport, a member of the Cass County, Indianapolis, State and American Bar associations and, by election, a member of the American Judicature Society.

Long active in the Democratic party, he was a member of the Democratic National Committee from 1937 to 1952. He is also a former state commander and national committeeman of the American Legion.

Mr. McHale received his LL.B. degree in 1916 from the University of Michigan, where he was an All-American tackle on the football team. He played professional football with Detroit for four years. Mr. McHale practiced law in Logansport from 1916 until 1932, when he moved to Indianapolis where he was legal advisor to the late Paul V. McNutt. McCahey a Chicagoan

Mr. McCahey, born in Chicago in 1890, has been president of the Dunn Coal Co. since 1920 and was appointed chairman of the board last January. He is also president and director of the Carl Miller Lumber Co. of Milwaukee, director and member of the executive committee of the New York, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad Co., and vice-president and director of the Pearson hotel in Chicago.

Mr. McCahey perhaps became best known to Chicagoans during his 13-year career, from 1933 to 1946, as president of Chicago's Board of Education. At the time of his appointment the school system was $31,000,000 in debt and teachers and merchants had not been paid for more than a year. Under Mr. McCahey's leadership all back salaries and debts were paid and many elementary and secondary school buildings were rehabilitated. Within three years after he took over, nine high schools on which construction had been abandoned for lack of funds, were completed.

Mr. McCahey also created the Chicago Vocational School, Jones Commercial high school and Dunbar Vocational School, and relocated Washburne Trade School. Washburne Trade School and Chi- (Continued on Page Four)

We Hear . . .

from HURON, Ohio

.... I am a former graduate of St. Joe, back in 1914, just 45 years ago, so I am going back to a little ancient history. In those days, St. Joe wasn't as large as it is now, and did not have as many phases of studies as you now have. When I attended, we had three courses of studies, one for the priesthood, academic, or school teacher, and commercial; so I took commercial. I had Father Scheute in bookkeeping, Father Pious in shorthand and typing, and Father Simon in commercial law. We also had a number of religious students, who worked their way through college doing farm work, waiting on tables and maintenance in general.

Father Titus coached the baseball team, and we played Loyola in Chicago, and had a good pitcher by the name of Joe Wood, who finally made the Chicago Cubs and did real well for himself.

See by your April issue that the Monon has discontinued some of its trains. I used to leave Sandusky, Ohio at 6:30 a. m., went to Frankfort, Ind., arrived there about 3:30 p. m., caught the Monon there for Rensselaer, and arrived about 6:30 p. m. That was a long drag in those days to get to college.

Father Wagner was president, Father Sauer was head prefect, Brothers Phoebe and Cobb were study hall prefects, and how well I remember Brother David, the barber. He was a character—hair cuts 50c, shaves 25c. We were permitted to go to town the first Wednesday of the month in the afternoon, back in time for supper, but we didn't eat much because we filled up on sandwiches and ice cream sodas all afternoon.

On St. Joseph's feast day, we were allowed a free day to do as we pleased, so we would take a hike out in the country, have a good meal at some farmer's house, and arrive back at the college with our anchors really dragging.

In those days, you had to have a smoking permit from your parents, which I didn't have, so we bummed some Prince Albert tobacco and papers from some of the members of the Raleigh smoking club, and if we got caught, we had to say two or three rosaries on the front walk of the Administration building. We used to go swimming in the artificial lake when the water was warm enough, and skating in the winter, and many a time we skated to Remington, Ind., about 10 miles away, on the Iroquois river.

I had the misfortune of having a stroke on my left side in 1950. I do not have the use of my left arm, but I count what blessings I have—a good wife, a good housekeeper, and a good cook. Together with them, my coffee, and my rosary, I am getting along pretty good. We have a nice home out here at Rye Beach, plenty of good food, so I thank the good Lord every night before I go to sleep that I am still perculating. Please excuse all errors, since I use the only system I can (hunt, punch, and swear).

I still enjoy receiving CONTACT, although everything has changed; nevertheless, it brings back fond memories.

With continued good wishes, I remain an old grad of St. Joe, respectfully yours,

Arthur H. DeLor, '14

New Head Named At SJC Extension

Fr. James I. Birkley, C.P.P.S., director of the St. Joseph College Calumet Center in Hammond, Ind., since 1952, has resigned his post. He has been succeeded by Fr. Henry J. Martin, C.P.P.S., who was the first director of the Center in 1951-52.

The change, which took effect June 1, was announced in May by officials at St. Joseph's College.

FR. JAMES I. BIRKLEY

Under Father Birkley, the Calumet Center has grown from 10 courses and 125 students eight years ago to its present average of some 25 courses and approximately 500 students per semester. Most of the students are part-time and two-thirds of them are studying for credit toward a degree. The remaining students are primarily employees in industry and law enforcement and correctional officers who are studying for certificates in specialized programs established for the advancement of personnel in these fields.

The majority of classes are held in Bishop Noll high school in Hammond and are taught by professors from St. Joseph's College in Rensselaer and qualified professional men in the Calumet and Chicago areas. Father Birkley's headquarters was at 4708 Indianapolis Blvd. in East Chicago, Ind. The entire operation was conducted in rented space around the Calumet region until January, 1958, when the Center dedicated its own library and faculty room adjacent to its headquarters.

A native of Cleveland, O., Father Birkley was ordained to the priesthood in 1943 and did parish work in Ohio for three years before coming to St. Joseph's College to teach in 1946. He received an M.A. degree in English from the University of Notre Dame in 1951, the year before he was appointed director of the Calumet Center. His next appointment has not been announced.

Father Martin holds the master's and doctor's degrees in education from the University of Indiana. A native of St. Louis, Mo., he was ordained in 1940 and taught for 11 years before being named the first director of the Calumet Center in 1951. He returned to St. Joseph's in 1952 to fill the newly established office of co-ordinator of student affairs and was also an associate professor of education.

Father Martin was assigned to missionary work in 1955, with headquarters at St. Joseph's College. He held that post until June 1.

Bahler, '43, Honored

Norman B. Bahler, '43, of Watseka, Ill. and owner of the Watseka Home Equipment Co., received one of the 25 "Man of the Year-1958" awards presented annually by the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad. The 25 community leaders from 25 cities along the route of the T.P. & W. were honored at a dinner May 11 at the railroad's offices in East Peoria.

The awards are called Willie awards and are presented in recognition of "broad community responsibility." They are patterned after the T.P. & W.'s corporate personality, Tee Pee Willie.

Schedules Almost Set In Football, Basketball

St. Joseph's football and basketball schedules are nearing completion for the 1959-60 seasons, and several new opponents have been added. The schedule-making for both sports is being handled by basketball Coach Joe Iofredo. An appointment had not yet been made, at this writing, to the head football post.

A home and home series with Loras College of Dubuque, Ia., has been added to the six Indiana Collegiate conference games on the football schedule, with Loras playing at St. Joseph's next fall on Oct. 10. The two teams have met nine times, between 1941 and 1952, and the Pumas hold a five to four edge.

Although the difficulties this late in the year are enormous, Iofredo is attempting to add two more games to the schedule, on Sept. 19 and Nov. 14. The Pumas' schedule is booked solid on the seven weekends from Sept. 26 through Nov. 7.

In basketball, 21 games of a possible 23-game schedule have been contracted. Iofredo has been authorized by the faculty athletic committee to schedule 23 games instead of the previous 21, partially because of a new holiday tournament in which the Pumas will participate in the new fieldhouse at Indiana Central in Indianapolis Jan. 1 and 2. With St. Joseph's and Indiana Central in the tourney will be Franklin College and Georgetown College (Ky.). Iofredo is still seeking two more games to fill out the card.

In addition to the 12 ICC and two tournament games, the cagers will again meet Marshall College at Huntington, W. Va., in the opener; new opponents Anderson and Villa Madonna (Covington, Ky.); and, as last year, Wabash and Bellarmine twice.

Spring Practice Ends With Intra-squad Tilt

Led by the hard running of halfbacks Les Klein and Dick Romo, the Reds ground out a 16-0 victory over the Yellows last month in an intra-squad football game which marked the end of spring practice.

Romo and Klein scored on runs of 10 and 15 yards respectively. Both conversions were made on passes from Romo to Klein.

Since a new football coach has not yet been appointed, spring drills were conducted by assistant coaches Joe Iofredo and Don Zimmerman. Enthusiastic over the squad's high morale, Iofredo commented, "The boys really had a lot of spirit and we had a good spring session." Most of the work, he felt, was going to be needed in the line, particularly at the guards and at center. He was somewhat more satisfied with the prospects of the backfield, which could be an all-veteran one on the starting eleven next fall.

Golf Team Ends Year With 5-6

St. Joseph's golf squad, after losing its first five matches, turned on a late season drive to win five of its last six matches and finished the year with a 5-6 mark, its best in five years.

Fr. Clement Kuhns' linksmen also finished fourth in the Indiana Collegiate conference in the 19-team Little State meet at Indianapolis. Scoring a four-man total of 640 for 36 holes, the Pumas were edged by Butler (617), Valparaiso (625) and Ball State (638).

Most consistent man on the golf team was junior Dick Etter of Lafayette, Ind. Other medalists during the season were Dennis Hershberger, sophomore from Rensselaer, Jim Klingele, sophomore from Lombard, Ill., Dick Nielitz, junior from Chicago, and Jack Clifford, senior from Chicago. Clifford, with a 36-hole total of 153 in the Little State meet, was medalist among participating NAIA teams (members of the Hoosier conference and Indiana State, Ball State and St. Joseph's) and thus earned the right to represent District 21 in the NAIA tournament at Quincy College in June.

Pumas Rally, Win Last 6; Finish Season With 7-8-2

St. Joseph's baseball Pumas hit their stride down the homestretch of the 1959 season and won their last six games to finish the year with a 7-8 record and two ties. With a double win over Ball State, Coach Bob Shemky's crew escaped the Indiana Collegiate conference cellar and finished in fifth place with a 3-6 record.

The Pumas went into their final three doubleheaders of the season with a discouraging 1-8-2 record after dropping a pair to Butler May 9, but they came back to sweep the twin bills from Navy Pier, Marian and Ball State. Much of the credit for the comeback belonged to righthander Bob Gallaher, who won four of the six games and allowed only one run—unearned—in his final 23 2/3 innings.

ball, also won the second game in the ninth, this time for starter Vrdolyak, who pitched four-hit ball. With the score tied at two-all, Deem scored the winning run on an error by the Navy Pier shortstop. St. Joseph's, managing only four hits themselves, had scored a pair in the third on a two-run double by Koehler.

Pumas Whip Marian

May 19—Gallaher won both games in relief for the Pumas, who smashed out a total of 22 runs and 25 hits to sweep the twin bill from Marian, 5-3 and 17-3. Whitlow and second-baseman Jerry Ruzicka had two hits apiece in the opener, which the Pumas won with a three-run rally in the ninth. St. Joseph's busted out with 11 runs in the second inning of the nightcap to sew up the decision. Gallaher, who had pitched two scoreless innings in relief of Grothouse in the first game, pitched five more in the second, allowing only one unearned run and four hits while fanning seven. This time he succeeded Simon. Whitlow and first baseman Jack Finnegan paced the 17-hit attack with three apiece, while Koehler blasted in five runs with a homer and a double. Whitlow also had a home run and two doubles, while Finnegan, snapping a long slump, collected two singles and a triple.

SJC Escapes Cellar

May 23—In a now-or-never performance, the Pumas finally haulled themselves out of the conference cellar with two well-played victories over Ball State, 4-3 and 2-0, in the final games of the season. Vrdolyak was the whole show in the opener until the ninth. He had allowed no runs and only five hits and had driven in both St. Joseph scores with singles to left. But the Cardinals knotted the score in the ninth on four walks and an error and Grothouse, who came on in relief at that point, hit the next batter with the bases loaded to give Ball State a 3-2 lead. But the Pumas rallied in the ninth to win the game, 4-3, on singles by Koehler, catcher Bob Groneman and third baseman Bob Decker. Vrdolyak had three hits in the game and Koehler, with a triple and a single, and Decker had two apiece.

Gallaher went the distance in the nightcap and scattered three singles while whiffing seven and walking only one for the 2-0 victory. The Pumas, who had gathered 12 hits in the first game, collected nine more in the second. Left fielder Mike Goldrick was the only one with two hits, while Kuzniar smashed a triple for the only extra base hit.

This marked the final game for pitchers Dattomo and Vrdolyak, catchers Deem and Jim Rogers, shortstop Kuzniar, second baseman Tom Freehill, and outfields Goldrick and Gagliano.

The Pumas, playing errorless

ACADEMICS

by DR. BRYCE J. JONES,
CHAIRMAN OF THE DIVISION OF
BUSINESS AND ECONOMICS

"Wealth is not without its advantages and the ease to the contrary, although it has often been made, has never proved widely persuasive. But, beyond doubt, wealth is the relentless enemy of understanding." With these words, John Kenneth Galbraith, the popular Harvard economist, proceeds in his book, The Affluent Society, to develop the tantalizing theme that wealth and not poverty is the fundamental economic problem of the Western World. Since the opposite view has long been the cherished idea of what Galbraith calls the "conventional wisdom"—ideas that have great staying power more because of their familiarity than their relevance—the task is by no means an easy one. But in the attempt Galbraith demonstrates that economic polemics can be scintillating, droll, and literate. A book replete with controversy and enlivened by a beguiling style could not miss as a best seller. It did not.

Professor Galbraith argues that economic thinking is inordinately dominated by the economic problems and ideas that existed in the 18th and 19th centuries. The central economic problem of the earlier period was ravaging poverty—a poverty created by the paucity of output, aggravated by egregious income inequality, and rendered intolerable by the personal insecurity implicit in a competitive and unstable labor and output market. Poverty seemed to be invincible!

DR. BRYCE J. JONES

In the midst of this condition, the science of economics was born in the writings of Adam Smith and his immediate successors, Ricardo and Malthus; and, according to Galbraith, a "tradition of despair" grew up which economists have never quite shaken. Although lamenting the poverty of the masses, Ricardo and Malthus developed economic theories which ostensibly demonstrated that poverty was inherent in the operation of irrepressible economic (and biologic) laws. To interfere with the workings of the "iron laws" would only make matters worse. For this, Thomas Carlyle promptly and justly dubbed economics "the dismal science."

Since 1800 economic output per head has increased prodigiously and income inequality is no longer a major social question. Through various means business and labor have succeeded in eliminating most of the causes of economic insecurity. Thus, in the span of 200 years, Western society has passed from poverty to affluence. Galbraith believes that only a select few have noted the passing.

Every ointment must have its fly and the achievement of affluence is no exception. Economic security is still vulnerable to the scourge of depression. If aggregate expenditure is insufficient to fully employ our labor force, the unemployed workers and the hard hit businessmen will be anything but affluent. Therefore, economic security requires that the economy operate continuously in the neighborhood of full employment. And this is where the snag comes in.

Galbraith believes that our fully utilized productive capacity far exceeds our original and urgent wants. Because of this our economic system must manufacture artificial wants if we are to prevent overproduction. Advertising and salesmanship are the means by which wants are created. The dependence of these contrived wants on production is called by Galbraith the "Dependence Effect."

Here then is the basic dilemma of the affluent society: we need full employment for economic security, but full employment forces us to produce many goods that are not very important; in turn, a "Dependence Effect" economy is likely to suffer from the instability of a large consumer debt structure, chronic inflation, and inadequate public services—three problems peculiar to an affluent society.

Because the economy is forced to operate near the full employment level, the economy is particularly vulnerable to price increases that originate, in Galbraith's view, in the few firm industries, such as steel, that bargain with strong labor unions. At full employment levels, unions are likely to gain wage increases that exceed productivity gains, and business firms are likely to use the wage increase as an excuse for even larger price increases. Society is powerless to prevent this wage-profit inflation since monetary and fiscal policies are either ineffective or politically useless because of a conflict with the goals of full employment and high production. The remaining alternative, direct price and wage control, is even more anathema in the "conventional wisdom." The result will be long-run inflation.

To solve the wage-profit inflation, Galbraith suggests that we partially divorce income from employment. This can be done by the introduction of a variable unemployment compensation program financed by the federal government. When spending is inadequate to maintain full employment, benefits will rise to about three-fourths of the worker's normal wage; as full employment is approached, the benefits will drop accordingly. Since unemployment will no longer be the terrible scourge of the worker, the necessity of maintaining full employment will be lessened. Additionally, the plan provides an automatic device for limiting declines in employment.

This reviewer finds Galbraith's chronic-inflation thesis rather thin. Many economists have recently argued that the economy is vulnerable to long-run inflation, but Galbraith's analysis of why this is so is neither precise nor clear. The union-few firm sectors are the apparent villains, but the reader is burdened more with a conclusion than with analysis. The variable unemployment compensation plan has a good deal of merit as a defense against the cumulative process of depression, but as a defense against inflation it is less encouraging. If an increase in unemployment automatically induces an increase in spending by the recipients of benefit checks, the upward pressure on prices will hardly be diminished. Worse still, what is to prevent unions or business firms from pushing up wages and prices without fear of a decline in their demand? Potentially unemployed workers without fat benefit checks and business firms without bullish markets are not likely to overprice themselves. Galbraith's plan might well increase rather than diminish inflationary tendencies.

The other major problem of an affluent society involves what Galbraith calls the "Theory of Social Balance." According to this theory, the supply of public services does not keep pace with the supply of privately produced goods and services. While our automobiles increase in number, size, and chrome, our highways and parking facilities lag behind. While our children are suffocated with all forms of contrived indulgences, our school system faces a crisis. Filthy streets, polluted air, slum areas, overcrowded hospitals, a research lag, and an uncertain defense posture are further evidences of a paradoxical social unbalance. The unbalance is further aggravated because a large part of federal taxes is preempted for defense measures, and local governmental units find that property taxes do not keep pace with increases in national income. The upshot of it all is that in the midst of plenty the public sector starves.

Galbraith's solution for the social unbalance problem is surprising. He proposes that we assign a percentage of federal tax revenues for selected public expenditures. As national income rises, an increasing amount of taxes will become available for schools and other high priority projects. To solve the financial plight of local governments, Galbraith suggests that greater use be made of the sales tax. Liberals have long since agreed that the sales tax is inequitable because it overburdens low income groups. On this there is no dissent in the "conventional wisdom." But the iconoclastic Galbraith argues that the standard of living of most Americans is sufficiently high for us to ignore the sales tax burden placed on affluent consumers. Obviously, these two proposals will please no one.

The "Theory of Social Balance" is intriguing, and certainly the author is at his telling best in contrasting our accomplishments in comic books with those in education. However, there appears to be an exclusive stress in the theory on the poverty of the governmental sector. True social balance also requires that the private sectors dealing with education, religion, charity, politics, medicine, research, and culture receive greater financial and moral support. Some may suggest that our failures in these private areas are more serious than our deficiencies in the public area. Be that as it may, the moral of Galbraith's book is that we need to concentrate more on the composition of national output and less on its size.

Galbraith's solution to the problem of social balance is to earmark a certain percentage of tax revenues for certain services. This is a dubious suggestion. Obviously there is no reason for believing that there is a unique mathematical relationship between variable tax revenues and the needs of society. Under Galbraith's scheme, the revenues might be inadequate or excessive. Such revenue eventualities would not be conducive to social balance or integrity in government. In any event, it seems unlikely that the plan would pass "political muster." A cynic might picture the Republicans as fearing that revenues would always be excessive and Democrats as fearing that the revenues would always be deficient (or do I have the parties reversed?). Such fears would surely prevent the passage of Galbraith's plan. Perhaps something more fundamental than indiscriminate tax assignments is required if we are to achieve true social balance.

The glamour of the book derives from the novelty of the basic ideas, the felicity of expression, and the audacity of the criticisms leveled at economists, businessmen, and consumers. Because Galbraith makes such a point of playing the satirist, the book is likely to have more appeal to the "New Yorker" set than to the serious student of social problems. If so this is unfortunate, for even though many will disagree with Galbraith's answers, few will fail to appreciate the significance of his penetrating questions.

The reader is urged to sample The Affluent Society. The book is literally bursting with unorthodox and controversial ideas that are thought provoking and often disconcerting. Neither conservative nor liberal will be spared discomfort, but in an age of complacency such discomfort may be efficacious.
